

HANNAH DAWN HENDERSON

Adopting a vocabulary from performance, video and graphical media, all underpinned by a literary voice, my practice negotiates questions of voice, identity and selfhood, authorship and authority. Essential to my work is the desire to pinpoint moments when language, narrative and voice -- not only in the linguistic and vocal sense -- becomes fragile, encounters limitations, and is rendered vulnerable to structure and conditions beyond itself, in particular: the precarious quality of individual interpretation and (bodily) appropriation/interruption. I seek to investigate the 'entropy of semantics' -- the chaos that arises when one tries to negotiate systems of meaning, identification and narration. Within these systems I am keen to reflect on the capacities through which voices and bodies become politicised/political entities whilst simultaneously remaining an individual vessel in which singular, autobiographical experiences are compiled, traversing time and place.
