PHILIP LÜSCHEN

A ‘vagued space’ pushes humanity to the margins, turning humans into ‘extras’ subjected to the main protagonist: the terrain itself.

Philip Lüschen is a visual artist and scenographer whose work balances at the intersection of architecture and theatre. His practice engages with the built environment through scenographic strategies, exploring the latent potential of urban space, the role of fiction in everyday life scripts, and the performativity of controlled and uncontrolled environments. Employing 3D simulations, (scale) models, film and photography, he exposes the constructed nature of human-made environments, their influence on individual and collective agency, and their potential to be reimagined as liminal spaces, inviting new forms of engagement and discovery. “Vagueing,” his own coinage, indicates a worlding strategy that queers homogenized urban landscapes by blurring the border between fiction and reality. Emerging from a dialogue with specific environments, his work takes shape through site-specific performances, video installations, writing, and film. His projects have been exhibited internationally and are included in the collections of Huis Marseille, Museum for Photography, the Dela Art Collection, and in the form of permanent public artworks across the Netherlands.
