KEXIN HAO

I am a visual artist born in Beijing (1993) and based in The Hague. I have an interdisciplinary practice across art, design, and theatre with a focus on performance. I combine a variety of media including video, printed matter, choreography, and music, while borrowing archetypes in pop cultures such as aerobic workout, video games, online streaming, puppet theatre, aiming to provide the audience with playful, participatory, and on-site experiences. What lies at the core of my art making is the creation of experiences addressing history, society and cultural heritage through bodily engagement. I am interested in the human body in relation to collective memory and political propaganda, as well as the entanglement of human and pest in health and hygiene campaigns.

Borrowing from ASMR mukbang—a genre of online eating show in which a host consumes food and amplifies the sounds of eating and drinking to trigger a viewer’s autonomous sensory meridian response—Hao immerses visitors in a four-course meal and guides them into a world where guts morph into worms and tongues fondle soil. Titled Lewd Bouquet, here the human digestive system, culinary routines, and sexual rituals intermingle with decomposing processes and compost organisms. The aural feast culminates in a toast: “Canon of Filth,” a song composed by Hao where haunting waves of melodies imitate, follow, and delay one another. As staggered voices harmonize over one another, the canon begins to resemble layers of compost and the synchronization between our intestinal and the extrinsic realms. Touring in rounds of dissonance, it celebrates the unwholesome and brings us ever closer to the dead, the rotten, and the underground, where we make life, where we make love.
2024	Lowlands Festival Biddinghuizen, Nederland This summer, you won't only find us at NDSM, but we're also shaking things up in Biddinghuizen during Lowlands! Together with artists Mette Sterre and Kexin Hao, we've put together a series of specially developed performance programs. The dance lesson that stays in your body forever. When you hear music, you want to dance, and every music genre has its own movements. They knew this in Mao's China too. Political slogans were set to music, and specific maneuvers were paired with them. This way, the ideology literally imprinted itself on your body. China-born Kexin Hao explores in 'Total Body Workout' how muscle memory is shaped by the era you live in. Feel free to join in her aerobics class. You can always leave the class, but will the class ever leave you? The rice pounding utensils become experimental percussion instruments to produce bass beats to the electronic music; the pounding movements develop along the increasing viscosity of the rice. Inspired by the traditional Chinese folklores and rice pounding work songs, this project tries to expand the rice pounding song to contain new narratives reflecting our current urgencies: can a woman’s body become, contrary to a recipient, a giver of forces and penetration? What if fierce acts don’t direct to violence and harm, but a process leading to nourishment and care? How does the transformation of rice translate the cycle and entanglement of birth and death, fertility and decay? The performance brings out a clubbing experience and a catering service to the audience. “Forceful Catering” thrives on feeding the ones who treasure beats and intimacy. supported by: The work was titled "Pound it!" and was developed during Summer Session residency 2022,

- 2024 On Point Of Climax Instrument Inventors Initiative The Hague, Nederland The ideologies we live in creep into the core of our beings and direct how we activate our bodies, where we address attention and how we perceive ourselves and the world around us. Human senses are biased: they are reflections of our conscious and unconscious understandings of our existence in the environment. Curated by Elena Apostolovski. Julia Sterre Schmitz's documentary film Come Here, Come Here invites (self)discovery of a 12cm organ left out of anatomy books and science discourse, as well as the general knowledge, until 1998. Stephanie Pan develops a feminist manifesto containing vocal gestures, discovering How To Not Know she suggests ways of being and creating while trusting the body, leaning on intuition and celebrating emotionality, vulnerability, and empathy. Kexin Hao with Forceful Catering transforms the rice-pounding utensils into experimental percussion instruments that produce bass beats to electronic music; while blending the public and domestic space she reclaims the act of penetration. A Women's Day program that honours and encourages intuition, action, and (self)discovery. Which sensations do we allow ourselves to have and how to express them, which knowledge do we lean on? It is a challenge to navigate what inputs to trust among scientific books, classical paintings, pop songs or Instagram ads. On Point of Climax searches for tactics and tools art can offer to explore female bodies and extend the ways of how the body can be activated.

- 2023 Liminal Wild: live CBK Rotterdam Rotterdam, Nederland howkexin.com/project/liminal-wild-live.html The research focuses on bats (in the coronavirus crisis) and sparrows (in the "eradicate 4 pests" hygiene campaign in China's Great Leap Forward) as carriers of symbolism and materials for personification in relation to political narratives in national health agenda, and how it reflects our understanding of ecology and immunity. The outcome is a performance combining music, spoken words, singing (rap) and movements encrypting the research outcomes and using human bodies as sites for metaphors to reenact the bodies of bats. Once a villainized creature, this bat has become a role model, a pop star, and a spokesman of our ecological and political emergencies. In the post-Covidian times when we have moved on from the pandemic, we should still think about the conflicts the pandemic had directed us to and left us in: conflicts between nation state and people; between countries; and between ideologies. Certain narratives are created to serve people's need for an enemy. In this work, through embodying bats and sparrows, I found a good entry to the political engagement as an artist and researcher. These species provide materials to understand the causes, potentials, dangers, and damages of the hero-villain narratives. And they are the new materials which host resistance of a divided society and the lurking autocracy. The body of the bat, the place embedding so much about liminality, is where we find resolutions to the increasingly polarised world.

2023 Evidence in Motion #5: Empty Orchestra The Hague, Nederland An exploration of intercultural and interspecies understandings through karaoke and visual storytelling. How do we communicate across the boundaries of one's own understanding? This is what Kexin Hao, Maja Simišić, Tuana Inhan, Gabi Dao aim to uncover during Evidence in Motion #5: Empty labour, the artist tries to trace out how our moving bodies used to cooperate in the extinct activities of production. From here she questions: how do we preserve the body movements and restore our moving bodies as the living archives? Can we restore it on this body of you and me, now and here? Future Dance of Nostalgia is a dancing game which invites audience to perform the choreography that extracts and abstracts the movements found in the pre-industrial, heavy physical labour, and work songs. Motion tracking technology allows the body movements to be quantified, measured, and evaluated. Historical archives of work songs provide the inspiration for the music that renders the old tales and melodies into clubbing beats that lead the dance. Through ethnographic research into work songs and the moving body, the project draws much needed attention to alternative historical archives of our times. The gaming technology, visual, and music, bring people closer to the past through a tangible and modern experience. The work also brings fun and togetherness to audience through public participatory dance sessions and interactive gameplay.

howkexin.com/project/total-body-workout
Total Body Workout leads you through a 'total body' experience in which history unfolds not in chronological order but in a head-to-toe sequence. How is our body scripted and shaped by the times it lives in? How are national agendas and political ideologies woven into bodily semiotics? How does one's body memory become an integral part of hegemonic historical narratives? And how do we inhabit a historical and totalised body? Based on nationwide physical exercise routines and mass gymnastic performances in Asia, the Eastern Bloc and the United States, Total Body Workout proposes a recomposition of Orchestra through using karaoke and visual storytelling and time-based media as a way to create multi-layered narratives that connect us with our environment. Within their works, the artists give our favourite cringe-worthy pastime a makeover, by using it as a vessel to tell stories that bridge intercultural and interspecies boundaries. Through reappropriating the aesthetics of singing, dance, and strange background videos, they create interactive experiences that allow us to change our own perspective. Empty Orchestra creates a stage for these explorations to come to life and amplify the voice of “the other”. Creating a safe space to express and change perspectives, that embraces the imperfect just as karaoke does. Inspired by pop cultural references, the artists are revealing the stigma of being a pest from bats and follow their journey as an endangered species, to exploring the peculiar connections that humans have to house plants as aesthetic objects in artificial environments, to creating platonic pseudo love songs for immigration lawyers. Reimagining the project space of iii as a otherworldly and multifaceted karaoke club for everyone – human and more-than-human.

Party” is a puppet performance that reimagines Mao Zedong’s phrase “Revolution is not a dinner party” as an invitation to reflect on food and interspecies intimacy. The play stages an afterlife dialogue between a sparrow and a rat. Drawing from Mao’s “Smash Sparrows” campaign and the “Great Hanoi Rat Massacre,” the two debate class conflict. A silverfish interrupts, revealing that all three characters are parts of one body and guiding them toward a revolution in which boundaries between self and others dissolve through the act of eating.

Unfair, an artist-led art fair, was founded in 2012 by three artists who wanted to improve the cultural infrastructure in the Netherlands. We have been dedicated to promoting emerging contemporary artists for over a decade, working with over 250 artists in more than 30 events. Our collaborations with these artists form the backbone of our platform, which aims to create connections, curate and promote the next generation of leading artists. By putting the artist first, we strive to create a fair art community where people can discover and buy art directly from the maker. We facilitated a one-day drawing workshop for students to gather and draw collectively a centipede that could represent the identity of their academy. This centipede then evolved into a butterfly for the Open Day campaign. I want to share our design and more importantly the process behind it. We liked the design, but we loved more the mess we made! 2020 It is very difficult to be an island of perfection in a sea of misery, but please do not doubt our sincerity W139 Amsterdam, Nederland The group exhibition initiated by Simon Wald-Lasowski for W139 explores themes of digestion, bodily cravings, erotic grotesque nonsense, sex as a matrice of power and the commodification of pleasure. The design is a resolution to my cravings on commodified design, overdosing found styles and elements, obsession of hoarding and displaying, and an unleashed show-off on the excess. howkexin.com/project/w139 Uitgevoerd

2024 Diary of Compost Creatures Maastricht, Nederland During my residency at Jan van Eyck academy, I was taking care of the compost bin. I was very interested in the behaviours of the decomposers and other creatures I found there, such as fruit flies, slugs, and springtails. These are the anthropomorphized portrayals of these three characters.

-- Creep's Garden of Eden Maastricht
What do you see if you zoom in onto the canvas' corners of the classical depiction of Garden of Eden? You see insects, undergrowth, all kinds of crawlies creeping under the creatures above. This drawing imagines that these "creeps" are the main characters of Garden of Eden. It is also an amplified impression of my life and friends at Jan van Eyck academy as I am, through immersing and inspiring myself day by day in the garden, embodying the horny fly, the ecstatic mouse, and, a pink little flower feeling so ready to squirt my pollen and then crunched dead by the snail on a same day! The drawing has been adapted into a poster for the Jan van Eyck party under the series of "Dragana Bar" organised by Warsaw-based Collective Kem.

- 2023 Future Dance of Nostalgia, preserving history through dance Magazine Neural Magazine Italië neural.it/2023/03/future-dance-of-nostalgia-preserving-history-through-dance/ There is a whole history of dancing as a competitive game, from the early 'Dance Dance Revolution' to the popular 'Just Dance', where a machine is quantifying and then evaluating players' moves. The physical involvement of the player and the use of memory to store the sequence of moves is what dance has always been about. In Future Dance of Nostalgia, Kexin Hao develops a dancing game where players have to re-enact the

- 2025 3Package Deal AFK Amsterdam, Nederland Al ruim 10 jaar stimuleert het AFK jonge internationale kunstenaars. Met de 3Package Deal faciliteren we een ontwikkelbudget, betaalbare woon- en/ of werkruimte en een netwerk voor toptalenten uit de hele wereld. Een programma dat past bij een internationale stad als Amsterdam, met haar 192 nationaliteiten. Het AFK stelt samen met Bureau Broedplaatsen per kunstdiscipline coalities samen van gerenommeerde kunstinstellingen uit Amsterdam. Deze instellingen selecteren en begeleiden de toptalenten gedurende één jaar. Het is niet mogelijk jezelf aan te melden. In september start elk jaar een nieuwe lichting. De talenten ontvangen vanuit het AFK een budget van € 25.000 om aan hun portfolio te werken. Als afsluiting van het jaar geven de kunstenaars, tijdens het International Art Talent Festival, een

The winner will be invited for a 4 week residency at iii workspace, which includes a fee of €2000 and a production budget of €1000. iii is an artist run, community platform supporting new interdisciplinary practices linking performance, technology and the human senses. Founded by alumni of the ArtScience Interfaculty and Institute of Sonology in 2013, iii has been supporting new graduates each year from the start. Since 2021 iii has obtained recognition from the Municipality of The Hague and the Creative Industries Fund NL in the form of structural funding and is therefore able to offer stronger support to artists undergoing the delicate transition between studies and profession. We see strong potential for future development in the work of Cemre Kara that we are eager to support through the residency program of iii. We also need to mention the two other nominees for the award, Kexin Hao with Total Body Workout for bringing joy to the authoritarian image of the healthy body at a time in which it is very much needed, and Leonardo Scarin for taking two things we don't usually like, a VR headset and quarantining, and combining them in the poetic and beautiful experience that is Variations on a Remote Room.

Als we er eentje moeten uitlichten, dan is het toch wel dat van de Chinese artieste Kexin Hao. De opzet van 'Future Dance of Nostalgia' alleen al is het vermelden waard: een parodie op het videospel Just Dance, compleet met bewegingssensor om te registreren of je het wel goed doet. Dat heet: repetitieve bewegingen zoals ramen lappen, rijst oogsten en ander Modern Times-esk bandwerk. Trouw aan de thematiek brengt Hao zelf ook drie keer daags haar performance live, waarbij het publiek fanatiek meedanst. 'Future Dance of Nostalgia' levert zodoende een mooie juxtapositie van keiharde realiteit en onschuldig plezier op.	2021	Nominee GGOBOT Youngblood Award GGOBOT Youngblood Award Enschede, Nederland

Website Jyni Ong London, Verenigd

www.itsnicethat.com/features/the-next-generation-2021-continued-200921 Every year we receive hundreds of brilliant applications from emerging creatives as part of our annual showcase highlighting fresh talent, The Next Generation (formerly known as The Graduates). We were so impressed, we've decided to celebrate an extra 19 candidates as part of a longlist of creative excellence. Below, you'll find a myriad of stories from all over the world and across a range of disciplines. It's the cherry on top of The Next Generation 2021, meeting those who were just a stones throw away from the showcase. That being said, it's worth mentioning that this list is just a handful of exceptional creative talent we witnessed this year and there were many more people we would have loved to spotlight. From investigative documentary photography to tongue-in-cheek Juicy Couture urns, a self-taught illustrator expressing her depression, sculptural dolls exploring nightlife as a queer person and much, much more; meet The Next Generation continued.
