JOHANNES EQUIZI

Johannes Equizi (1996, Italy) is a cross-disciplinary artist and designer with a background in architecture, currently based in The Hague. His work bridges visual art and socially engaged practice, and focuses on exploring and reimagining how humans inhabit environments and come together as a society. He describes it as a “world-building practice”. Informed by urban theory, philosophy, anthropology and craftsmanship, Johannes makes use of fiction, spatial installation and role-playing to question oppressive socio-spatial paradigms and to create collective experiences of how the world might be otherwise. His practice has been supported by Dutch arts/research foundations including Mondriaan Fonds, Stimuleringsfonds, and Stroom Den Haag. Alongside his artistic work, Johannes works and collaborates across game design, installation and exhibition design.

2026 Inhabiting The Skin The Hague, Nederland Inhabiting the Skin is a workshop about transformation, of letting go and becoming other: a rehearsal where participants embody a future version of the self. Designed by Johannes Equizi and Futurall, the workshop blends theory from futuring, architecture and queerness with the somatic experiences of making, role-playing and movement. We believe that by approaching these as complementary tools, we can stimulate introspection, desire, and imagination. If you could let go of a personal constraint, what would you desire to become? The workshop unfolds as a gentle journey where participants can sense and craft a new ‘skin’, role-play temporary identities, and explore their relationship to their own

2025 Beloved Waters Stroom Den Haag The Hague, Nederland Each ripple — Another glimpse This spatial narrative has been conceived for the group exhibition Beloved Waters, curated by Leana Boven. As a continuation of the research “Dowsing across Fields”, this intervention takes the form of a series of sculptural elements crafted entirely from aluminium. In dialogue with the works of other artists and Stroom’s exhibition spaces, these sculptures form a landscape that accompanies the visitors’ experience into the ripples of water. www.stroom.nl/stroom-algemeen/activiteiten/beloved-waters

2024 One, none, hundred thousands Drops Maakhaven The Hague, Nederland This solo exhibition was the first time my entire “Dowsing across Fields” research came together in one space. Began in 2023 this project examines how water is perceived and shared among humans, envisioning alternative ways to coexist with this vital resource. Often treated as a commodity, a weapon, or a common good, the exhibition guided the visitors through the diverse narratives surrounding the waters I encountered in my research. For the first time, I showcased “Round-Well Forum”, an aluminum sculpture resembling a water well - a central gathering place that has historically shaped routines, stories, and relationships of survival. I envision this sculpture as a movable platform to facilitate round-table discussions on water, bridging various economic, political, and belief systems. johannesequizi.com/one-none-hundred-thousand-drops/

2023 Dowsing across Fields LAB23 The Hague, Nederland This on-going research investigates how scientific logics and privatisation threaten informal practices dealing with water. By focusing on the role of the dowser - a person able to find underground water by using unconventional methods - I researched how their role changed across time in different social environments. I perceive the dowser as an archetypal figure crucial for making water accessible and for the development of human settlements. Is today's dominant scientific thinking threatening their survival? Is their knowledge changing the way water is perceived and shared? The controversy around the dowser’s practice puts into conversation different body, others and the architecture containing them.

2024 The Roof we made The Hague, Nederland johannesequizi.com/theroofwemade/ My interest in self-constructions began when, as a kid, I was building tree-houses in the fields around my house. In secondary school a great teacher taught me how to do technical drawings. I guess my hands and eyes led me to studying architecture. Reading Colin Ward’s book “Architettura del dissenso” was a big drift in my path. Whenever I could, I traveled to see how differently people come together through the way they dwell places. If I ended up making art projects it’s because I'm unsatisfied with how architecture is practiced today. I decided to approach it from artistic and speculative standpoints, with a focus on people’s emancipation. With the work “The roof we made” I start a research-trajectory that explores the relationship between housing rights, DIY architecture and bottom-up/mutual-aid practices. By doing this, I feel I also revisit bits of my past.

2023 Dowsing across fields The Netherlands / Italy, Nederland johannesequizi.com/dowsingacrossfields/ Interested in how water-control sets daily routines and geopolitical equilibriums, this ongoing research investigates the relationship between community, water and its infrastructure. What kind of political, social and economical values define the perception of water and rule its distribution? By counterposing different systems of beliefs, values and logics, the project aims at stimulating awareness by speculating on new models for sharing such a limited common resource. I began this research in 2023 and I made 4 exhibitions/episodes showing the development: 1st episode focused on the controversial figure of the dowser, a person capable of sensing water underneath the ground through unconventional methods. This practitioner makes water accessible for communities by creating wells and hence influences human settlements. Will dowsers maintain a role in a future dominated by capitalistic/scientific worldviews? Could their work reshuffle the way water is distributed beyond privatisation? This research became a multimedia installation (images above) consisting of a video, a performance, sculptures and a series of poems and drawings. 2nd episode was Unknown Sources, a storytelling walk in collaboration with a dowser. This activity created a common ground to collectively question and speculate on the policies and practices dealing with the water supply and infrastructure. 3rd episode was As Common as Well, a solo show focused on the ways in which communities interact with wells and water infrastructure. 4th episode took place at Maakhaven, The Hague, in November 2024. In this solo show I will present my comprehensive research project "Dowsing across Fields" and a new aluminum sculpture, "Round-Well Forum". This sculpture resembles a water well - a central gathering place that has historically shaped routines, stories, and relationships of survival. I envision it as a movable platform to facilitate round-table discussions on water.

2022 Where the Ink starts Royal Academy of Art The Hague The Hague, Nederland johannesequizi.com/where-the-ink/ Realised in collaboration with artist and game designer Jana Romanova, this project is a short live-action roleplaying game(LARP)about artist’s relationships with their creativity in the situation of time and daily life pressure. The game begins with a group of writers squatting their studio space and having to finish their script before a deadline set by Spark Press, a famous publishing house. 2023 As Common as Well The Grey Space in the Middle The Hague, Nederland This solo exhibition took place at the art venue "The Grey Space in the Middle" in The Hague in occasion of the event Hoogtij #75, in December 2023. The work displayed is the continuation of the research project titled 'Dowsing across Fields', an ongoing investigation into how scientific logics and privatisation pose a threat to informal practices related to water. By examining the figure of the dowser – an individual capable of locating underground water using unconventional methods like forked twigs or pendulums – I explored how the dowser's role has evolved over time within various social contexts. The dowser is seen as an archetypal practitioner essential for making water accessible by creating wells, thereby influencing the transformation of human settlements. The current focus of the research centres on the ways in which communities interact with wells and water infrastructure. It seeks to understand how power structures and collective responsibility handle a common, limited resource. The research also questions whether the prevailing scientific paradigm today poses a threat to the survival of dowsers. These inquiries foster discussions that bridge different economic, political, and belief systems. Can this controversy lead to new possibilities where humans perceive and share water in a more equitable and self-sustaining manner? The multimedia installation consists of some brick sculptures, a video and a series of poems and drawings. A performance took place consisting of pulling several times the rope from the wells alternated by the reading a poem. thegreyspace.net/program/1-12-2023-as-common-as-well/

2023 Unknown Sources CorrectionVille#3 Festival Vaals, Nederland To which extend do we question the map maker's tools for the maps we use? A map made by a dowser that used a wooden stick to map underground water streams, is not a conventional method. But what are conventional mapping methods? And, if the wooden stick was the only tool to make maps in the Middle Ages, when and by what was it replaced? This expedition, guided by cross-disciplinary artist Johannes Equizi, is not about questioning if a dowser makes thruthfull maps, but about investigating the 'thruthfullness' of map making methods. chrome-extension://efaidnbmnnnibpcajpcglclefindmkaj/https://cartopology.institute/wp-content/uploads/2023/08/programCV03_24juli.pdf

2022 Livingscapes (part of Lena Longefay's show "Silent Meetings and Loud Breaks") Stroom The Hague, Nederland During 'The Try-out Gallery', organised by artist Lena Longefay, I exhibited Livingscapes. This ongoing research-project explores the process of translation between an architectural content and its forms of representation and realisation. The installation is made of clusters of various paper formats hanging from the ceiling through different ropes. By experimenting with several techniques, the pieces express imaginary architectures, intimate landscapes and systems of spatial representation. I call these 'Livingscapes' since they relate with built environments dwelled by imaginary communities every writer is played by two people. A participant may become either a writer or writer's creativity. Both of them will need to find a way to work with each other to finish a written piece on time. By looking at creativity as a separate entity with its own will and mysteries, this game invites participants to reflect on how to deal with their own creativity and with fellows who are in a similar situation of daily life crisis. In many ways, this game is about finding peace with your own mind in the situation of pressure that every creative person goes through on a daily basis. The game has been played by MA students of Kabk.

This is built together with a few performers/friends by combining different materials, techniques and tools with a DIY approach.

2022 As Tangible Horizons Third Space Helsinki, Finland johannesequizi.com/astangiblehorizons/ How does a story line come to exist? What if the thresholds between the characters inside and outside the story start to blur? Does the making and remaking of living environments pass through the overlap of individual microcosms? "As tangible horizons", a side project of ongoing project Primordi, is an interactive installation in which visitors could make use of tools and navigate in the space as if it would be in an eternal moment of becoming something else. The above questions guided my spatial research towards the creation of a micro-macro landscape facilitating the swap of perspectives between creature and creator, an in-between dimension where people could outline and craft their and others spatial narratives.

2021 Primordi Royal Academy of Art The Hague The Hague, Nederland johannesequizi.com/primordi/ In this on-going project I imagined how 5 characters, belonging to a speculative society called "Primordi", would inhabit the planet. I imagined and materialized their stories, professions, interdependencies and values through a repertoire of writings, drawings, performances, objects and tools. The installation's pieces could be therefore looked at backwards and frontwards: realized by the characters in order to present themselves. Embodying multi-layers of meanings and storylines they continuously unfold and reveal new perspectives upon notions such as marginality, independence and mutual aid.

2021 Nature, Melancholy in the Anthropocene Our Lady of the Assumption Church Voorburg, Nederland “Nature, Melancholy in the Anthropocene” is a group exhibition offering a synthesis of socio-political challenges of the Anthropocene through artistic imaginations and inspired by Lieven de Cauters publication, ‘Ending the Anthropocene.’ Together with other visual artists, I have been invited to explore new ways of cohabitation, symbiosis with nature, and with one another, through existing and new works. In a time in which our current living patterns are reaching their limits, their works call us to end the time of extraction by questioning the current system and offering a glimpse into a better tomorrow. Their results build bridges of understanding and express the desire to change a world that often seems unchangeable for the individual. thespectrum.space/melancholy.html

2019 Design Chewing TENT Rotterdam, Nederland Together with the INSIDE students and REFUNC, we built a 'design reflection space' for visitors in the hall of TENT during the festival “Design Chewing”. The installation - consisted of a construction of folding chairs and a movable, rotating wheel, equipped with ones; in this way each of us followed a personal research-thread and at the same time came across the other ones. Starting from a peer-to-peer equal position, such playful research helped us unfolding new understandings and meanings of what actually collective gestures could potentially be and generate.

2020 Primordial Clepsydra Royal Academy of Art The Hague The Hague, Nederland johannesequizi.com/primordial-clepsydra/ This project investigates the global issue of rural villages abandonment and tries to understand how speculative scenarios and role-play games could be intertwined to open up new perspectives about collective participation, mutual support and rural peripherality. Could the act of blurring the thresholds between life and game and between past, present and future facilitate the twist of social relations within a territory? With “Primordial Clepsydra” I imagined an alternative framework to share knowledge, skills and acts of care between the inhabitants of a rural village in South Albania. I experiment such scenario through a role-play game event taken place in The Hague.

2019 2A Interzone Royal Academy of Art The Hague The Hague, Nederland johannesequizi.com/2a-interzone/ This on-site project was an experimental investigation of an abandoned area in The Hague which I named “2A Interzone”. To become familiar with it, I spent time roaming there, collecting traces, writing impressions and sharing talks with passengers, playing with materials and objects found there. I started a written/visual report and delved into questions regarding the relationship between space and the meanings of care, freedom and ownership. The established interaction between my presence, the abandoned area and its social surrounding progressively shaped the research. Acting as a facilitator, I ended up inviting local residents to participate and self-organize activities to rise collective awareness about the nature and the unforeseen spatial qualities of such area.

“Architecture of the Abandonment” is a research into the socio/spatial potentialities of what is marginal in the architecture realm. It starts as a repertoire of experiences, architectural projects and socio-political cases related to themes such as nomadic architecture, industrial archaeology, DIY and bottom-up participative processes. The intent was to investigate and reformulate them to rethink an alternative way for humans to inhabit and shape the built environment. At its end, I chose to analyse a siderurgic centre as possible site where to envision this experimental architectural scenario.
