JEDRZEJ ELTMAN

Within my practice I try to approach things with a question of rather "how" (things are seen, perceived and approached) rather than "what" is being shown. It is crucial that the experience is ephemeral - there is no knowledge demanded as you enter the space and no knowledge promised to be gained as you leave it. That part, I remain open to self reflect on participants through my presence. Where it oscillates is the origin of meaning, point and its context, inner and outer, human and the room. The language of their transition and focal point's location are denominated in my presence.
