SARAH-ROSE ANTOUN

I trace what empires and algorithms leave behind: in archives, in bodies, in the ordinary gestures of daily life.

I work at the point where something has disappeared or is disappearing, and I document what remains: what keeps circulating, what gets repeated, what continues to function without being named. My practice moves across photography, archival research, installation, and performance. I am a French-Lebanese and Moroccan visual artist and journalist, born in Paris, trained in London and The Hague. I am myself a product of the migrations and displacements I work within. That position is the method. In Don't You Forget About Me, I worked with children living in an asylum seeker centre in Katwijk, tracking what Europe transmits to displaced children without naming it: suspension, uncertainty, and the possibility of being transferred without notice. In What is the Scope of the Gulf Separating Us? I worked with a suitcase my father packed in Lebanon in the 1970s and with the daily images he sent me during the 2024 war, following how intimacy and violence travel through the same channels. In an essay currently seeking publication, I traced how civilian images shared on WhatsApp feed into military surveillance infrastructure. An image is not always safe to make. My work begins there.

PROJECTEN

2025 What Is the Scope of the Gulf Separating Us The Hague, Beirut, Nederland A suitcase my father packed in Lebanon in the 1970s, reopened during the 2024 war. A performance and installation built from a father-daughter correspondence, daily images, roses, and ruins, that asks how conflict is experienced through screens and how intimacy and violence travel through the same channels.

2024 Don’t You Forget About Me Stitching De Vrolijkheid Katwijk, Nederland A collaborative photography project made with six children living in an asylum seeker centre in Katwijk. Cameras circulated between us. Authorship shifted. Some children were transferred or deported before the project ended. That absence is also in the archive.

-- Untitled ceramic installation The Hague, Nederland Ongoing. Screenshots received during periods of conflict transferred onto handmade ceramic tiles. Each tile functions as a pixel,drawing from the geometry of Moroccan zellige. The image moves from the instant and immaterial space of the screen into a material that is fragile and highly durable.

OPDRACHTEN

2025 Family Jewellery Making St de Vrolijkheid Katwijk, Nederland A three-month-long workshop with families in the AZC center of Katwijk, which was about making photographs into something tangible: images that can be held, carried, kept close.
